

Forests and HP Printing and Digital Imaging Paper Products

January 10, 2006

For many years Hewlett Packard Company (HP) has worked to provide its customers with products and services that are environmentally sound throughout their life cycles and to conduct its business in an environmentally responsible manner. This commitment and practice extends to our wood based paper media products as well.

To further this commitment, HP has established a program to verify that any virgin wood based paper products sold by the company are derived from forests that are managed using practices that ensure long-term sustainability, provide for the conservation of forest wildlife, plants, soil and water quality, and are both socially and economically viable.

All wood pulp used in HP Papers is harvested from sustainable, renewable forests. No wood from endangered forests is used. HP partners with companies that have as their policy a commitment not to procure wood from forests designated by Conservation International as biodiversity hotspots or major tropical wilderness areas.

Our paper supplier/partner employs a dedicated team of ecologists, wildlife biologists and foresters. This team works closely with government agencies along with many environmental organizations to safeguard the unique ecological, biological diversity of their forests.

HP has verified that its printing and specialty papers meet the strict criteria we have outlined. In addition these paper products are manufactured using elemental chlorine-free processing. These papers include:

- LaserJet and inkjet office papers
- LaserJet and inkjet premium papers
- HP Office Recycled paper
- Photo papers
- Greeting cards
- Specialty papers

In an ongoing effort to meet customer needs, the company now offers HP Office Recycled Paper. It is available in North America with a minimum of 30 percent post-consumer recycled content by weight and in Europe with 100 percent recycled content. In these regions HP uses HP Office Recycled Paper to meet its own everyday office paper needs. Our customers can be assured that HP Office Recycled Paper offers the same quality as that of other HP office paper products.
