

Eric Vishria

Vice President, Products, Software

Hewlett-Packard Company

Eric Vishria is a vice president of products in the Software business unit at HP. In this role, he is responsible for the IT Service Management and Project Portfolio Management products.

Vishria joined HP through the acquisition of Opware Inc., where he most recently was vice president of marketing. During his eight years at Opware, he held a variety of product management and product marketing positions, where he was instrumental in developing the strategy behind Opware's award-winning IT automation software.

Before joining Opware, he served as a technology investment banker at Broadview International. Prior to Broadview, he wrote computational modeling programs at the University of Tennessee.

Vishria holds a bachelor's degree in mathematical and computational science from Stanford University.
